Private

The Nevins Log House is located at the intersection of Eyler's Valley Flint Road and Debold Road several miles northwest of Thurmont, Maryland. The principal elevation faces north with a gable roof on a east-west axis. The property includes a large stone springhouse, a bank barn with an attached drive-through shed and a chicken coop. The house is important in showing an original log dwelling house that has been changed to accommodate late twentieth century ideas. These changes have altered the appearance, form and type of building that the nineteenth century owners intended. The outbuildings that accompany the house, no longer in use, exemplify buildings of a mountain farm.

7.1 Description:

The Nevins Log House is located at the intersection of Eyler's Valley Flint Road and Debold Road several miles northwest of Thurmont, Maryland. The principal elevation faces north with a gable roof on a east-west axis. The property includes a large stone springhouse, a bank barn with an attached drive-through shed and a chicken coop.

Constructed circa 1840, the 2 story house of log construction with V-notching rests on a stone foundation. Logs are exposed. The gable roof of standing seam metal has one exterior end stone chimney (new). There is a boxed cornice with cornice returns. Window and door surrounds are plain throughout.

The main (north) elevation has three asymmetrical bays on the first floor with two doors and one 1/1 window. The second floor has two evenly spaced 2/2 windows. Marks in the facade indicate an former full facade porch. The south elevation has three asymmetrical bays on the first floor with one door and two 2/2 windows. The second floor has two evenly spaced 2/2 windows. A two story screened-in porch with a shed roof covers half the elevation. The east and west gable ends are two bays wide. There is new weatherboard in the gables. Windows on symmetrical on both floors with 1/1 windows in the west gable end and 2/2 windows in the east gable end. Each gable end has two 1 light attic windows. There is a basement door in the stone foundation on the east elevation.

An early photograph (circa 1900) shows the house sheathed in weatherboard, having 6/6 windows, two brick interior end chimneys and a one story wrap-around porch. There was also a two story ell extending from the south elevation.

The interior has one large room on the first floor; an original partition was removed. All log ceiling beams and walls throughout the house have been exposed. In the attic, there is an unusual structural feature that survives: a 4 feet tall truss that spreads across part of the attic and projected supports into the floor down to the ground level of the building.

Extensive renovations and alterations have been recently undertaken to fit the tastes of the current owner on both the exterior and interior of the building.

Outbuildings date from the mid-nineteenth century. None of the outbuildings are in use. A large stone springhouse is situated several feet to the east of the house. There is quoining at the corners. A gable roof of corrugated tin and standing seam metal runs east to west. There is a door opening on the west gable end. A door and a window opening on the south elevation have flat wooden lintels.

A large bank barn on a stone foundation sits several yards northwest of the house. It is sheathed in vertical siding and has a gable roof of corrugated tin. A drive-through shed with an arched opening is attached. Four stable openings are in the east elevation. There are small square vent windows throughout the building. A chicken coop, located south of the barn, is sided in weatherboard and has a shed roof with exposed rafters. Ribbons of windows are on the east elevation.

8.1 Significance:

The Nevins Log House is important in showing an original log dwelling house that has been changed to accommodate late twentieth century ideas. These changes have altered the appearance, form and type of building that the nineteenth century owners intended. The outbuildings that accompany the house, no longer in use, exemplify buildings of a mountain farm.

There are many other examples of houses in Frederick County where the log construction material has been exposed. While some log buildings were constructed to be exposed, most of them were sided. Exposing log walls on both the interior and the exterior has become a fashionable trend throughout the county. Unfortunately, it may obscure the integrity of the building as seen in this building, the Nevins Log House.

This farm was owned by Mrs. G. Green in 1858 and A. Bower in 1873. It is located in Eyler Valley and may be connected to the Eyler family who owned farms in the immediate vicinity. The land was probably owned by Eylers at one time.
